How long until the next check? Schools that require improvement are usually checked within 30 months of the latest inspection report. They can also receive supervised visits. We can also check at any time if we have concerns. We usually notify in the afternoon of the working day before checking. We can also inspect schools without notice. Cottenham Village College is located in Cottenham, Cambridge and is part of the Cambridgeshire local authority. This mixed-sex high school has 895 students, with a capacity of 1,050, aged eleven to nineteen, and the type of establishment is academy transformation. Ofsted Report – In November 2015 Parent View Ofsted runs a facility called Parent View for parents to share their views on terms offered by schools. We will encourage you, please, to take a moment to register on the site and provide your opinion about college. Parent View replaced the paper questionnology tables that inspectors used to circulate at the time of school inspections to collect parental perspectives. To complete the short questionn questionno, please visit . You'll be asked to provide an email address and choose a password when you sign up. Once your login information has been activated, it only takes a few to choose answers to 12 short questions about such as how well we deal with bullying, the quality of teaching, whether the level of homework for your child is appropriate, and whether you will recommend the school to other parents. As well as informing Ofsted inspectors, it is also helpful to us because it provides valuable information about what you think about schools and helps us improve. Remember, you can give your opinion on your child's school through Parent's Perspective at any time during the school year. At the time of the test, you can resive your views and the facility will override your previous feedback so that only one 'view' for each parent, each school, is organized. Admission criteria are often complex, and may vary from year to year. The best source of information is usually the relevant local government website, but once you've put your attractions into a school, you should ask them how they see things panning out for years that interest you. Many schools admit children based on distance from school or a fixed basin area. For such schools, the cutting distance will vary from year to year, especially if the school prioritizes siblings, and the model will be central to exceptions (mostly siblings). Schools admitted on the basis of academic or religious choice there would be a much more scattered pattern. * The colored area outlined in black is the Population Survey Input Area. They are made up of a group of neighboring postal codes, occupying their strange shape. They provide an indication, but not an accurate, basin map of the school: always refer to local authorities and school websites for accurate information. The more 'hot' the color the more children are admitted. (November 2018) (Learn how and when to remove this template message) Bottisham Village College was designed by local architect Urwin and built by Ambrose of Ely in the 1930s. Originally the school's website included both a high school (high school) and a middle school (elementary school). It was opened as a modern high school on January 1, 1937. [3] The school's opening was officially opened on 6 May 1937 by Oliver Stanley, Chairman of the Board of Education. Henry Morris and Mr. H. F.B. Fox - His Majesty's Inspector - along with Mr. Stanley and the Earl of Elgin met at the university by Lord Fairhaven, Chairman of the Board of Directors and Director. Mr Stanley and Lord Elgin met with staff and then inspected buildings and equipment. At 12.50pm, the group left school for lunch with Lord Fairhaven at Anglesey Abbey. Upon returning to college, the group met with an honor guard consisting of high school boys and girls and a boy and girl representing middle school. [4] From 1937 to 1950 in the early days of Village College, the school acted as a modern high school, as part of the Tri-Party System. Pupils who failed their eleven plus exams went to Bottisham, where they effectively learned all the skills needed to live in the countryside around Bottisham. The lessons are very gender-based, with boys learning agriculture, furniture, sports, science and gardening while girls learn to cook or make more needles. Evening classes for the whole community are equally diverse, with examples including Appreciate music, folk dance classes, furniture, opera society, first aid and firefighting. There are Saturday night dances in the main hall as well. As well as operating as a hall for the hall, in the early years of its existence the main hall at Bottisham served as a cinema. [6] However, World War II is testing time for Bottisham Village College, especially with an air base in the village. British and American pilots play a big role in the life of attend school dances but also other functions at the school. Staff stayed up all night to monitor school buildings, watch the fires, and with rations of clothes and uniforms students were absent from school life until 1946. During the nationwide 'Peach for Victory' campaign, tennis courts, located behind warden lawns, were converted into cabbage patches in an effort to grow as many vegetables as possible. [6] In the 1950s in January 1955, Charles Brereton came to the school to take up the position of Director. This was the last appointment of a Village College Warden made personally by Henry Morris before he retired. During his time, Charles Brereton built some monumental changes to the school. The fact that he was Director through ROSLA to 15 and then to 16 allowed him to see the development of the college in numbers, from 350 to 850 as well as the expansion of buildings, equipment and grounds to the school that it was when he left in late 1975. Charles Brereton spent more than 20 years as Warden and is by far the longest-serving Warden. In 1996, after his death, there was a memorial service, planted a tree and inaugurated a plaque in the courtyard. [7] Out-of-school activities for students, still uncommon for non-Village College high schools, formed an important part of students' lives in the 1950s with many school sports teams participating in a variety of inter-school competitions in subjects such as Hockey and Athletics. As well as sports, the school has a scout group and a group of young men. [6] At the time, Bottisham was a performing place, second only to Impington to all the influences captivated by Henry Morris's idea. As a result, the school has received many high-end visitors including Hugh Dalton .B. Priestley. [8] Glynn Williams' Bottisham stone of the 1970s and 1980s brought a period of great change to the university, mainly for the dramatic change of the school from modern to comprehensive high school. School buildings have been expanded and upgraded and many new staff have been appointed. In five years, the school has doubled in size as the basin area expanded and former cambridge grammar school pupils joined Bottisham. However, there are also some drastic cuts that hit the Education sector hardest. Evening classes were expected to be financially self-sufficient. Brereton, however, was determined to maintain the spirit of Village College, of an uplifting environment and a caring community. Canings have also been eliminated and the school accepts instead a new era of technology. [9] During the 1970s and 1980s, many new buildings such as english blocks, gyms, technology blocks (including drama workshops) and science blocks were added to the original school buildings to fit new subjects that would be taught at the school such as comprehensive school. As with this, in 1976, 1976, The governor opened a new swimming pool, planned from 1971, north of the university. (fn. 43) The pool was covered by a large building in 1982 and expanded in 1988. The 1990s onwards the School has seen four different faces walking in and out of the Director's office since Charles Brereton left in 1976, but still the school holds its key values laid out by Henry Morris. Many buildings were added in the 1990s, including the math block, a new community library and a new music block to continue school facilities. In 1997, the school changed its uniform from a blue blazer and tie to a more normal green polo shirt and sweatshirt. In 2004, the university became a College of Humanities Specialists, a specialty that increases the amount of funding it receives for humanities teaching thus allowing it to expand its teaching of these subjects. The school was later edgy with high-achievement school status, and after a successful Ofsted test, was invited to apply for Applied Learning status in 2009. This introduces additional GCSE and BTEC vocational courses for students in Phase 4. [10] In 2009, the school began building a new block on the site that reflected the school's original semi-circular buildings and thus completed the original plan for the school when they were laid out in 1937. This new building includes a new set of English classrooms as well as a newly built purpose SEN (Special Educational Needs) unit. Along with the new buildings, this has also led to the redevelopment and landscape of the Wardens lawn as well as the installation of a new sculpture designed and built by local sculptor Matt Sanderson. [11] The school officially opened the new Morris Wing on Saturday, November 3, 2018. [12] In addition to the celebration is the 80th anniversary of the school's history. The building cost £16.7m and was built in a partnership between Cambridgeshire County Council and the Anglian Learning Trust. Morris Wing, named in honor of founder Henry Morris, has 12 new classrooms, as well as the Evans auditorium (named after CEO Kate Evans), a ball room, recording studio and practice room used by students. [13] Wardens lawn with new buildings on the right side of the main hall (just ahead). Bottisham Village College's Trust and Academy Status Governing Body has proposed changing the school category from community school to foundation school, thereby getting the Charitable Foundation called Bottisham Education Trust, which came into force in September 2010. [14] The organisation has been identified by the Department for Children, Schools and Families as a high-achievement school, and local authorities are 'fully supportive'[15] of the transition to a State of Trust for schools. In February 2012, the school was converted to academy status. In February 2016, the university became the top school in Multi-Academy Trust, as well as Netherhall School. [16] In July 2012, the university was rated outstanding by Ofsted.
